7. The wood in which things have no name is in fact the universe itself, as it is apart from symbol-manipulating creatures who label portions of it because — as Alice earlier remarked with pragmatic wisdom — "it's useful to the people that name them." The realization that the world by itself contains no signs — that there is no connection whatever between things and their names except by way of a mind that finds the tags useful — is by no means a trivial philosophic insight. The fawn's delight in recalling its name reminds one of the old joke about Adam naming the tiger the tiger because it looked like a tiger.

Skin of a sacrificial victim shrouds Xipe Totec, the god of spring. The human pelt dangles from his wrists, masks his head, and is knotted at the nape like a bun. The Aztecs greeted spring by sacrificing impersonators of this god; their skins were donned by penitents. The rite recalled the husk of corn about to ripen, the earth about to renew itself with vegetation.* HANS HINZ, MUSEUM FÜR VÖLKSKUNDE, BASEL, SWITZERLAND
